This special single-theme issue of Educational Considerations presents a coordinated series of invited articles addressing current issues, ideas and trends in educational facility and capital improvement planning. Our editorial frame of reference and intent was straightforwardly conceived and shared from the outset; we wanted to provide practicing school executives with useful information that might contribute to better educational management. We leave the judgment of how well we have accomplished our editorial intent to the reader.

Each article in this issue was specifically written in response to our invitation. In each case we were cognizant of the fact that we were asking busy professionals to rearrange their priority of activities so that time might be given to writing a special article. We take this opportunity to express our thanks and appreciation to each contributing author for a job well done.

Finally, we suggest that while our own primary focus of concern is directed to Kansas education, we nevertheless believe the issues and ideas presented herein are of potential interest to educators throughout the country.
