The Bicentennial and AAACE

Trying to think of something significant to put here has been a "right smart" challenge. The Fourth Estate has played such an important role in the history of our country that it would take volumes to tell it all. Yet, because of the great privilege we have in our right to speak and write and publish it seems we must express our gratitude in some appropriate way as our nation commemorates its 200th birthday.

AAACE members have been blessed with a precious freedom, including the right to work. In return, they have performed a great service to their fellow countrymen (and women), keeping a sense of duty and responsibility and integrity high on their list of professional ethics. It is a high tribute to the men and women who have devoted their lives and talents to our kind of work. We think we can be justly proud of our contribution to our society, our culture, and our economy.
