

Students selected to promote K-State Libraries, educate peers

Eleven new students from a wide range of majors have been selected through a competitive process to join 19 of their peers as K-State Libraries Student Ambassadors.

The 30 Ambassadors serve two-year terms as advocates and representatives for K-State Libraries at social, cultural and recruitment activities. They also provide valuable feedback on K-State Libraries' initiatives and services, as well as advocate for the perspectives of the larger university student body.

"The group has really found its footing," said Darchelle Martin, public relations officer and one of the group's advisors. "We're especially pleased that our 30 students come from diverse majors and phases of their academic careers, from first-year students through doctoral candidates."

The ambassador program offers leadership opportunities, professional connections and the chance to make a positive impact at K-State. For more information, visit www.lib.k-state.edu/ambassadors.
